Verma, Ritu & Others (ed)

Sub. : Climate / Women / Climate Change

Pub. : UNEP, P.O. Box 30552, -00100 Nairobi, Kenya
2011, 68p;

Women are often in the frontline in respect to the impacts of a changing climate. Globally the world is seeing increasingly frequent droughts and floods which are having economic but also profound social consequences. The women and people of Asia are currently at greatest risk with over 100 million people affected in this region annually. Adaptation, vulnerability and resilience of people to climate change depend upon a range of conditions. These vary from their degree of exposure and dependency upon weather patterns for livelihoods and food security, to varying capacities in adaptation, which are influenced by gender, social status, economic poverty, power, access, and control and ownership over resources in the household, community and society. All have been discussed in this book.

Review of Climate Change Adaptation - E0713 /17.02.00 /STE

sterrett, Charlotte

Sub. : Climate / Environmental Degradation / Climate change

Pub. : OXFAM International, UK

2011, 100p;

Climate change is predicted to have severe consequences for South Asia, particularly in agriculture. Adaptation efforts in South Asia have so far been fragmented, lacking a strong link between national climate change strategies, plans, and existing disaster risk reduction, agricultural, and other relevant policies. Focusing on five countries in the region (Bangladesh, India, Nepal, Pakistan, and Sri Lanka), this review captures examples of good practices in climate change adaptation (CCA) programming, in order to inform Oxfam's learning, thereby enabling it and other organisations to replicate some of good practices in their own programmes and to advocate their adequate financing and governance.

2014, 44p;

The voluntary sector plays a pivotal role in the socio-economic development of the country in areas as diverse as health, education, women & child development, urban development, environment etc. Recognizing the efficient and effective role of this sector, the Government of India passed the National Policy on May, 2007. VANI in collaboration with VSO India initiated a project to study the current status of National Policy on Voluntary Sector and to develop a National Policy on Volunteering which will recognise the spirit of volunteering and create space for volunteering in India. This study report primarily focuses on the Indian context taking into account certain global conditions. Data gathering involved intensive desk research to understand the concept, history and current status of the National Policy on Voluntary Sector in light of Section 6. The study was based on analysis of both secondary and primary data and was conducted in a phased manner. The draft policy was finalized based on consultations with numerous organizations and experts.

Tikoo, Rajib (Ed)

Sub. : Radio / Community

Pub. : One World Foundation C/O minst. Of I&B, GOI, India

2013, 271p;

In essence community radio stations are meant to be not only 'for' communities but also 'of' and 'by' them when promise would be fulfilled by all stakeholders who make sincere efforts to build an enabling ecosystem for communities to set up stations or take over existing stations and run them on their own. This compendium seeks to answer some pertinent questions like : How to fast-track setting up of more community radio stations? How to ensure stations are responsible without curtailing their freedom of expression? How to ensure that communities take complete ownership of stations? How to create an enabling ecosystem or programming managerial, technical and financial sustainability? How to ensure that community radio is used adequately for strengthening participatory democracy and people's development at the grassroots? And How does community radio set up and leverage convergence to amplify its voice? The essays contained in this volume examine the decade since educational institutions and NGOs were allowed to run community radio stations and also analyse the pitfalls, promises, challenges and opportunities that lie ahead and are likely to shape the fortunes of the community radio movement in the years to come.
